As both an experienced accountant and accomplished transaction attorney, Mark Brasee represents a broad spectrum of clients in a wide range of industries, as well as entrepreneurial start-ups, nonprofits, individuals, and families throughout Nebraska and across the Midwest.

Mark's law practice concentrates on business and corporate law, real estate law, commercial agreements, finance, taxation, and business succession and estate planning.

Mark's diverse background and unique skillset enable him to counsel corporate clients in all aspects of business law. Within today's ever-changing legislative landscape, he consistently investigates state and federal legislation to proactively guide businesses in understanding and navigating the government assistance options available to them. Large or small, his goal is the same: to analyze his client's issues, create a strategic plan to solve those issues with bottom-line efficiency and achieve his client's goals while protecting the interests of the client.

When clients need sophisticated business succession and estate planning solutions, they look to Mark for innovative advice and counsel. Mark's holistic approach considers not only the client's personal needs but also the business requirements, ensuring that clients have a comprehensive plan that protects the future of both their family and business.
